This new service is initially available in Chevy Chase, Maryland, Northwest DC, Falls Church and west Arlington, Virginia.

New Service Offers Peace of Mind to Families and Patients

When you are home-limited from advanced illness or disability, getting to a doctor's office may seem hard or impossible. Getting prompt access to care for serious chronic illness can have major benefits. And missing the right care at the right time can result in unneeded 911 calls, ER visits or hospital stays. That's traumatic and expensive for you and your family.

Primary care and social support services delivered at home

Our new Primary Care at Home (PCH) program can help you and your family member live with dignity and independence.

Starting this December, we will provide primary medical care and social supports in the comfort and safety of patients' homes. Whether you live in a private home, assisted living facility, or continuing care retirement community, we can meet your individual needs. The program offers:

OUR EXPERTISE:

Experienced non-profit that specializes in advanced illness and elder care

Capital Caring Health has provided compassionate, community-based care for more than forty years. We're the leading non-profit provider of advanced illness care and elder health services in the mid-Atlantic region, serving Maryland, Virginia and Washington, D.C.

Primary Care at Home (PCH) is part of Capital Caring Health's new Elder Health program which offers expanded care and support for older adults and families who face the challenge of serious chronic illness and disability. The new PCH service is led by our new Chief of Geriatrics, Dr. Eric De Jonge, who has built similar services in the D.C. area for over 20 years.
